Rootless Cactus of California

Curious among vegetable growths of the new world, one which is seldom seen of men, is the rootless eactus of the Calfornia desert. This plant, a round, compact growth, rolls about the level floor of the desert for some eight or nine months of the year, tossed hither and yon by the winds which blow with icreeness over all of California's sand plat during those months,

At the coming of the rains, or rather, the cloudbursts, which aweep the desert in its springtime, this cactus takes root, wherever It suppens to have been dropped by the last wind of which it was the plaything and immediately begins to put out all around it small shoots which in turn become cacti, exactly like the parent plant.

These young growths increase in size apidly, sucking the moisture both from the parent plant and from the surroungng earth. The roots do not penetwite the soil deepty, but spread often over a circle whose radius is not less than ten feet. These roots, too, are small, but se had in the territory they cover .- Technical World Magazine.
